To Make an Image

We think of our world image and we are justifiably concerned that it be a good one. However, there is one image that we can do something about and that is the way we, as individuals, look to our neighbors.

The future of the world may lie in the attitudes of each of us. To go along with the crowd is particularly hazardous and increasingly easy. The hard core of self-respect and concern for others is ever present, and although it may appear to be losing the battle, it will survive. Some day self-respect and concern for others will be a happier world on which to live.

The whole world watched the brutal assassination of our president, John F. Kennedy, but after the shock waves of sorrow subsided, it went about its business in the same old way.

Not long ago 37 people watched a woman being stabbed to death, and although it took three attempts spread out over a 35-minute period of time no one lifted a finger to help her. Fear was the reason given for not helping nor calling the police, and certainly evil thrives on fear.
